

Obra Partnership South America Public Event and Learning Conference

November 17-19, 2010 Lima, Peru

Hosted by

International Youth Foundation (IYF)

Centro de Información y Educación para la Prevención del Abuso de Drogas (CEDRO)

and

U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID)

Purpose of the event

This three-day event will serve to publicly present the South American Youth of the Americas Partnership as well as to strengthen all three sub-regional partnerships in the Obra Program. During the Public Event on the first day, Obra partners, participants, and youth from around the region will be joined by high-level officials from Peru, the U.S., and other countries in the Latin America- Caribbean region, who will highlight the youth-focused commitments made at the 2009 Summit of the Americas, offer recommendations for moving forward in addressing issues and overcoming obstacles that youth at-risk face, and comment on the significant roles partnerships can play in meeting current challenges. These roles include collectively raising awareness of youth at-risk issues and strengthening programs and services to improve education and employment prospects for youth in the region.

During the following two days, Youth of the Americas partners from civil society, private sector and public sector agencies from each of the LAC sub-regions will join USAID, IYF and other stakeholders to:

- Analyze youth at-risk dynamics throughout the Latin America and Caribbean region, as well as in South America specifically
- Draw lessons learned from programs which have had clear success in replicating best practices, have strategically considered scale and also advocated for improved design of large government programs

- Explore the theme of alliance-building, and learn from successful experiences in multisectoral partnerships that have had significant impact
- Strengthen participant understanding of "best and promising practices" in the region, and offer practical examples of how to identify and document them
- Highlight progress made in the sub-regional partnerships, and strengthen Partnership Action Plans in the Caribbean, Central America as well as South America

Overview

Over 100 million people in the Latin American and Caribbean (LAC) region are under 30 years of age – the largest cohort of youth in the region's history – and represent particular opportunities and challenges for growth and social change. Young people make up significant proportions of the population in most countries, further challenging governments to meet key needs such as education and job skills training. The potential for economic and social growth is tremendous if these needs are fulfilled, while the risk of conflict, unrest and other social ills increases as needs go unmet.

Already issues such as youth violence, poor education, lack of employment skills and other obstacles are frustrating millions of young people across the region. Unemployment in the LAC region rose by a quarter between 1995 and 2005, and rose again during the most recent economic crisis of 2008-2009. On average, young people are at least twice as likely to be unemployed as adults in the LAC region; a statistic which masks the problem of low wage informal work performed by poor youth in the region. These youth often receive poor quality and incomplete education, having left school for economic or other reasons. "Out of school, out of work" youth face an uncertain future with few options. The sense of frustration is widespread, due to a lack of access to real opportunities and alternatives to improve their lives.

In the face of these challenges, many initiatives are underway across the region to support and serve youth who seek to improve their lives. These initiatives have a common purpose: to provide viable options for youth – especially those who are vulnerable or at risk, estimated by the World Bank to be up to half the population in the LAC region. These include opportunities to gain market-relevant skills, complete basic education, learn crucial life skills, and help understand the modern economy, the marketplace and how to succeed. While many initiatives are being implemented, they often lack the linkages, synergies, scale and coordination among actors to have sustained impact. Public-private partnerships have often proven to be a critical link in ensuring quality service delivery and sustainability of programs for youth development in both education and employment.

In response to this situation, U.S. President Barack Obama called for renewed and strengthened partnerships in the region to promote greater opportunities among the region's youth at the 2009 Summit of the Americas. Subsequently, the International Youth Foundation and USAID, in coordination with the U.S. State Department, developed "Obra", which aims to form private and public partnerships that will raise awareness of youth at risk issues and strengthen youth services to improve education, employment prospects and life skills for young people throughout the region.

At the Peru Public Event and Learning Conference, experts, practitioners, and other key stakeholders from the public, private and civil society sectors will come together to frame the key issues facing youth, learn about programs which are having impact on youth - especially "scale" initiatives – and continue to build partnerships among civil society, public sector and private sector organizations. These multi-sectoral alliances will raise awareness of critical challenges facing youth at risk and society at large, identify "what is working", exchange best practices, and influence programs and policies which serve youth. Relationships, interests and resources will be leveraged to ensure that youth are provided the education and skills to take advantage of opportunities.

Finally, this is the third event of the Obra Program, following the LAC-wide Learning and Launch Event which took place in Kingston, Jamaica from April 12-14, 2010, and the Central America Media Event and Learning Conference in Guatemala City and Antigua, Guatemala from July 21-23, 2010. The intent is for the Peru event to continue building on the results of the Jamaica and Guatemala conferences, while deepening the exploration of issues which face South America. The results and outcomes of this forum will strengthen the knowledge base of youthfocused programming, and set the stage for the final Obra Public-Private-Partnership conference in mid-2011.

About Youth:Work

Youth: Work is a Global Development Alliance Leader with Associates assistance mechanism that USAID and other U.S. government agencies can utilize to access the youth employability programs, services and expertise of the International Youth Foundation. Under this mechanism, USAID and other entities can choose to expand or replicate successful IYF programs as well as to design collaboratively new programs tailored to local realities and priorities. The goal of Youth: Work is to improve livelihood opportunities for disadvantaged young people around the world by supporting: improved access to high-quality, integrated training to increase youth employability; greater youth employability and entrepreneurship support services and networks; and an improved enabling environment for youth employability. Youth: Work also promotes cross-project learning and networking events; targeted training and capacity building; rigorous monitoring and evaluation; support for partnership and leverage development; and other special initiatives.

preparing youth for the world of work

About Obra

A two-year initiative, Obra was awarded under the Youth: Work global program with USAID. It builds on IYF's foundational programs such as entral and the Education & Employment Alliance to ensure youth at risk have improved access to services and programs needed to prepare them for citizenship, work and life. In addition to creating multi-sector alliances to support those goals, Obra will develop mechanisms for identifying and sharing best practices so that successful experiences may influence the design of programs and policies; and apply these practices in specific education and employability projects which directly benefit Latin American and Caribbean youth. Expected outcomes include: multi-sectoral partnerships mobilized to support youth at risk; youth at risk more prepared and productively engaged; and youth at risk programs and policies better informed.

About IYF

The International Youth Foundation invests in the extraordinary potential of young people. Founded in 1990, IYF builds and maintains a worldwide community of businesses, governments, and civil-society organizations committed to empowering youth to be healthy, productive, and engaged citizens. IYF programs are catalysts for change that help young people obtain a quality education, gain employability skills, make healthy choices, and improve their communities. To learn more visit www.iyfnet.org.

This program was made possible in part by the generous support of the American People through the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) through Cooperative Agreement No. EPP-A-00-08-00006-00. The views expressed by the author of this publication do not necessarily reflect the views of the United States Agency for International Development or the United States Government.